The Nao of Brown. The Nao of Brown #1 GN. 273 pages / 07 Oct 2015. Denitrifying biotransformation of N,N-dimethylaniline with nitrite and N-oxide using Pseudomonas putida F1. Cyanide-resistant pseudomonads were isolated from a spent commercial mineral medium and a model wastewater. Both isolates displayed reduced denitrifying biotransformation of N,N-dimethylaniline (DMA) with nitrite (NO<sub>2</sub>(-)) and N-oxide. In these experiments, an intact cell of Pseudomonas putida F1 was exposed to the model wastewater containing 500 mg of DMA L(-1) for 120 h and the denitrifying biotransformation rates were compared with those of the unadapted P. putida F1. The denitrifying bacteria lost 13% of their activity after 120 h of growth in the unadapted condition, while a loss of only 5% of activity was observed in the adapted condition. The denitrifying biotransformation rates of both cultures under denitrifying conditions were identical. Denitrification of DMA with NO<sub>2</sub>(-), as the sole electron acceptor, was investigated in the presence of different amounts of DMA. Rates increased with higher DMA levels. This result suggests that the oxidation of DMA with NO<sub>2</sub>(-) may

How to call a model function in the controller using cakephp 3.0? Eg: In the controller function page.ctp, I have this call: Vocabulary->search(['Term' => $myTerm])?> in this call, we have a function call to the model's function. I need to do the same thing in the controller function. Is it possible? A: You can't call it directly, but you can call it via the $this->set() method. Example: $this->set('myModel', $this->myModel->search($term)); You need to understand that the object used by CakePHP is not the same one that your controller class uses, but the one that CakePHP's set method uses. In your controller, that is the $this variable. In your model, that is the $this->myModel. CakePHP's controller can only access the $this->myModel property, but it doesn't have access to the functions (which is the $this->search() function) in that model.
