Tracheotomy tubes are used in the treatment of certain individuals who are unable to speak, but who can clearly communicate through the use of throat signals such as coughing, whistling, etc. Conventionally, such tracheotomy tubes are made by inserting an elongated steel tube into the patient's trachea, normally through the patient's neck. The tube is connected to a bulb and a valve to control the release of air from the bulb. The valve is opened to permit air to pass through the tube from the bulb. The valve is closed to stop the flow of air. After the tracheotomy tube is inserted, the patient's trachea is opened surgically or by means of a laryngoscope and a tube having an inflatable sealing ring is inserted through the tracheotomy tube. The tube with the sealing ring is then placed over the tracheotomy tube and is inflated so as to seal off the tracheotomy tube. This technique for sealing the tracheotomy tube requires a relatively large amount of surgical time. For example, the tube with the sealing ring is inflated by means of a relatively high pressure air hose. Further, the tube with the sealing ring has to be inserted through the tracheotomy tube with the high pressure air hose. Still further, it is essential that the air bag be inflated just prior to inserting it over the tracheotomy tube. The entire sealing procedure must be carried out within a few seconds. The need exists for a device which is capable of fastening to a tracheotomy tube in a relatively easy manner, and which is also capable of sealing a tracheotomy tube after it is inserted. U.S. Pat. No. 4,589,414 to Vance, Jr. discloses a method and apparatus for securing and sealing a tube to a tracheotomy tube. This disclosure requires the use of a double-lumen tube through which a cuff of the tube is moved into position over the tr 2d92ce491b
