Autocad 2016 for Windows Category:AutodeskBiological and biochemical properties of chorionic gonadotropin and subunit A of bovine follicle-stimulating hormone: nucleotide sequence of subunit A and the comparison of the amino acid sequences of subunit A and beta-subunit. The nucleotide sequence of subunit A of bovine follicle-stimulating hormone (bFSH) has been determined by chemical degradation and nucleotide sequence analysis.

The results indicate that subunit A has a polypeptide backbone of 188 amino acids and contains three disulfide bridges. The nucleotide sequence of subunit A was also determined and the sequence was compared to that of beta-subunit. It was found that subunit A contains 41 residues at its COOH-terminal end corresponding to the first 18 residues of beta-subunit. The internal amino acid sequence in subunit A was found to be homologous with that in beta-subunit, but the homology was lower than those in beta-subunit and common alpha subunit, indicating that the three subunits are
