We retrospectively reviewed the medical records of 102 patients diagnosed with acute bacterial rhinosinusitis. The average age of these patients was 48 years old. The male to female ratio was 0.55:1. Seven patients had undergone turbinectomy or submucous surgery. Five of them also underwent antrostomy. Antibiotics were prescribed for 26% of the patients in whom data were available. The duration of the treatment was more than 7 days in 2% of the patients. These patients had larger maxillary sinus sizes than patients who did not receive antibiotics. Although the incidence of relapse was higher than that of chronic sinusitis, only one patient showed a relapse of sinusitis. Two patients required surgical intervention for intracranial complications.Q: Do the Roman virtues apply universally, or are there counter-examples? In modern western society, the notion of virtue seems to consist of three things: Self-control Justice Generosity Do these virtues exist in every society? Or are there any societies where they don't? A: The Roman virtues are universal as long as "Roman civilization" exists. But "Roman civilization" did not last for that long. There were lots of Republics (e.g., Italian, Spanish, etc.) that did not have the Roman virtues, for example: Virtue Constantia is the virtue of all good men; it is an attainment worth all others. It can be nothing but sound, and a thing perfect in itself, whether it affect a few or a crowd, whether it be seen or unseen. For good things are produced by good men; all things have their cause in some good and perfect thing. And, as the right use of a thing cannot be hurtful, if you call it a virtue, so virtue itself cannot be hurtful. It renders the minds of good men just, kind, moderate, ready to yield to the pressure of any
